Anchorage Superior Court

Date: September 10, 2011

I grew up in northern Illinois and remember deciding very early to pursue justice. My love for the outdoors caused a detour, however. My early jobs were in forestry and construction throughout the West and Midwest. These lasted through college and afterwards, as I saved money for law school. Eventually, I studied law at the University of Wyoming and, there, met my beautiful wife. We came to Alaska in 1986 and I worked for a now-defunct law firm handling a wide variety of mostly civil suits. I then came to the Attorney General's Office in 1989 and, while attaining senior status, have been responsible for handling or assisting with cases in many of the areas covered by the Department of Law. Outside of the law, I am active mostly in outdoors-oriented youth activities and my church. My wife and I love and are committed to Alaska.
